

Early Journal Content on JSTOR, Free to Anyone in the World

This article is one of nearly 500,000 scholarly works digitized and made freely available to everyone in the world by JSTOR.

Known as the Early Journal Content, this set of works include research articles, news, letters, and other writings published in more than 200 of the oldest leading academic journals. The works date from the mid-seventeenth to the early twentieth centuries.

We encourage people to read and share the Early Journal Content openly and to tell others that this resource exists. People may post this content online or redistribute in any way for non-commercial purposes.

Read more about Early Journal Content at <http://about.jstor.org/participate-jstor/individuals/early-journal-content>.

JSTOR is a digital library of academic journals, books, and primary source objects. JSTOR helps people discover, use, and build upon a wide range of content through a powerful research and teaching platform, and preserves this content for future generations. JSTOR is part of ITHAKA, a not-for-profit organization that also includes Ithaka S+R and Portico. For more information about JSTOR, please contact support@jstor.org.

obligations assumed by the United States were seen to be too great; slowly but surely the people are coming to the realization that again they have been almost to Utopia, but that this is a matter-of-fact world, where responsibility always carries with it obligation. They are beginning to think that their faith has been sadly misplaced in Mr. Wilson.

I also spent one year in France, and I am sure I speak for a good many of the returned soldiers in saying that "charity begins at home."

R. G. HINE.

Kansas City, Mo.

THE "REVIEW" IN BRAZIL

SIR,—Will you allow an American, who has always openly and freely expressed his mind, to give you a word of appreciation for your excellent article, "The Independence of America," and for David Jayne Hill's superb "The Obstruction of Peace," in your April issue?

In a foreign land, it often becomes necessary to acquiesce when one feels that a negative would and should be the answer for the conduct of the homeland. It is, therefore, refreshing, to say the least, to find such a clear and broadminded article as your magazine contains "allowed" to come to a foreign land for our neighbors to read, so that they may learn the true state of affairs.

THE NORTH AMERICAN REVIEW is always hard to procure here, and each boat must be watched. "There is a reason."

GEO. P. LINBERG.

Rio de Janiero, Brazil.